downloadShannon Hoon? Hoon means water in Korean. It's a common nickname in Korea, so it's not like this is a case of a popular name being used as a pejorative. What it's a case of is a group of religious fundamentalists to bully the community into following their version of religion and punishing people for being different. What's next? I could see Christians on TV trying to convert Buddhists. I could see Muslim (and Chinese, etc.) radio and TV hosts condemning other religions. I can see this turning into an old-school McCarthyism and all of us feeling we have to "defend" our communities. And this is just one of the groups that could get into trouble with this. Groups that support homosexuality? Homophobia is a Christian hatred of homosexuality; it's not only anti-gay, but it's also anti-Jewish and anti-Islamic (as well). Groups that support abortion rights and reproductive health and choose to use contraception? Homosexuality is the tip of the iceberg in terms of a wide range of health care and related services that are also considered a sin. Many health care providers are concerned about the reality that they'll have to refuse care to clients that they find morally objectionable. There are many, many clients that they can't refuse. The medical profession is up in arms over the "Maverick" bill in the California state legislature. The bill is basically making it illegal for health care providers (even hospitals, clinics, and etc.) to refuse care to clients that they find objectionable. It's not only that they could be fined and/or held criminally liable for refusing care. They could even lose their license to practice. And that's only the "punitive" side of it. The "corrective" side is the real problem. By eliminating the freedom of health care providers to refuse care, they are taking away the right of people to seek the care that they need and to make their own health care decisions. I was reading a recent article on the subject by a "Maverick" bill supporter in the Daily Telegraph in the UK, and there was this line that really struck me: "We need an honest discussion of conscience, not a witch hunt". Conscience is a very private, 82157476af
